Climb Higher challenges the negative connotations associated with “stewardship” and invites congregations to completely change the conversation around this critically important topic.

Instead of talking about the needs of the church budget, Climb Higher suggests a discovery of your congregation's compelling vision for ministry. Instead of selecting your stewardship leaders by default, CLIMB encourages the development of strong leadership through setting clear and challenging expectations.

Climb Higher involves changing the entire culture of your congregation to one of gratitude, where conversations revolve around sharing God's abundance rather than holding on fearfully. Climb Higher encourages the sharing of ministry stories rather than pledging to a budget. And, finally, Climb Higher asserts that if you truly believe expressing generosity results in a deeper connection to God, you have no choice but to boldly ask others to become more generous givers.

Walk an entire community into a ministry of financial stewardship

By Mark Duncan

Giving has never been about the money. It never will be. The problem is that people often believe it is about nothing but the money. In "Climb Higher" McKenzie and Miller combine their broad experience to provide the concrete proof.

Yes, the book is geared towards church leaders, but no mistake about it; this volume is all about how regular people can understand what real giving is all about. They simply need to read it and see themselves in one of the many examples the authors employ to demonstrate their concepts, and ask themselves, "What would I do in this circumstance?"

It is that simple. It is that powerful.

Of course, if you are a church leader, "Climb Higher" is also step-by-step guide in the basics of how to walk an entire community into a ministry of financial stewardship. Yet, the big difference between all the other books on stewardship and this one is that McKenzie and Miller begin with nuts and bolts simplicity -- a universal foundation of gratitude. Why gratitude? Because they know through their vast experience that when leaders begin to teach giving they must first get those they teach to recognize that true giving can only begin with a grateful heart for all that God provides.

Finally, to top it off, McKenzie and Miller back their bold warrants with example after example of how their process has worked over the years and then they complete the lessons with real life materials that can actually be used by church leadership.

Personally, after twenty years of working in the field of Christian Stewardship it is truly refreshing to discover this amazing book. Well done, McKenzie and Miller!

The Church and the S-Word

By Maewynia McLain

People may inwardly groan at the mention of the word 'stewardship,' thinking it means we will be pressured to give more money. This unusual little book goes in a different direction, condensing the whole matter of stewardship to a very simple idea. The essence of that idea is gratitude, prayer and faith all defined in a way that doesn't make you feel like you are being horn-swoggled. What we find we are reading is not about the isolated concept of money but rather a basic look at discipleship which leads away from guilt driven giving to an irresistible desire to give. There's no padding, no filler in this book, and just enough illustrations upon which to memorably hang the reasonable yet radical outline. When McKenzie & Miller finish their treatise, they stop writing. What a novel idea, eh? Even if you were not trying to raise funds or set a new budget, you would find this book useful in guiding others, or yourself, into a simpler, more joyful walk with Christ.

CLIMB Higher

By Herbert Mather

McKenzie and Miller provided local church leaders with a very helpful resource to guide their ministry of financial stewardship. It is easy to read without being shallow. The book has an abundance of "how to" stuff as well as "why" to do it. The why explanations are grounded in the faith and experience of the writers.

This book is about making disciples for the transformation of the world. Discipleship is a matter of the heart, the mind, and the pocketbook. McKenzie and Miller keep reminding us of the holistic dimensions of faith.

As a bonus, their illustrative material is exciting. Many readers will undoubtedly use the story of the golden Buddha of Bangkok the next time they preach or do a lay minute on stewardship. It is excellent!
