With so many electric shavers on the market, it can get really confusing and frustrating to find the right one, and that's why I created this full buying guide.

There are a lot of people that really don't know where to start when it comes to choosing an electric shaver. A few years ago, I was in that exact position. I was shaving with disposable blades, and every other shave I was getting razor burn. As my facial hair got thicker, the irritation got worse.

So I decided to try an electric shaver and I went online in search for reviews. Unfortunately, I couldn't find any useful information. I found tons of fake reviews which just lead to the online retailers. No one was actually buying and testing the shavers. So that's why I created my own reviews, which ended up here in this buying guide.

Over the last few years I've bought and tested all the top selling models and I want to share all the reviews with you. You can find detailed written reviews, as well as full video demonstrations.

My goal is to help you find the right shaver through individual product reviews, comparison reviews, and my personal experience testing these products.

This buying guide is a resource which helps you first figure out your beard thickness, and then recommends specific shavers. There are detailed reviews as well as links to full video demonstrations.

There's also a full section on how to use an electric shaver to get the best results, as well as a full beard trimmer section.

Here is the table of contents:

The Sad Truth About Electric Razors John Krause,jlk3536@verizon.net

By John L. Krause

Tyler,I have been using electric razors for over 50 years and people think that they are better,no they are worse! I started in the military with an Elton which was the precursor to all of the Brauns.The construction was better being almost all metal.Battery life was not as good and this is the only advancement that has been made. The best electric razor ever was sold by the REAL Abercrombie and Fitch in New York.They billed it as the 60 second shaver and you could actually do a pre sale shave in the store(before aids became a problem).That shaver was made by an Austrian co. called Peyer. Peyer left Austria and went to Japan for a few years and eventually to China. Current versions are a poor substitute and mostly plastic.They do have a battery operated unit which is cheap and fairly efficient.(Good travel Razor where electricity may be unavailable) Braun is the best of the lot I agree but it is no better than a 20 YO Braun that I purchased in Boston.That one does not have good battery life so that always take the power cord with me. Norelco does not hack it and all of the top models,Braun,Panasonic, and Norelco are totally over priced!

Years ago the lower end models often shaved almost as well as their big brothers. That is no longer true.As far as how to prepare your face,I find no different in pre electric lotions whether $3 or $20.If your beard is really dry,I prefer nothing. In the summer,powders such as Eltron,s stick will achieve the dryness that I need.Hot showers add little but take up time. I have tried shaving oils.They do work to some extent but then you spend extra time getting rid go the oily residue. the after shave cleaning by machine is just ann added expense and is not necessary because rinsing the head and the foil in warm water will do the trick!

Thorough advice on reviews

By Gr8bald1

This is a great/important starting point for those that are about to buy an electric razor. Tyler's book and videos are very good and covers many cconcerns. Don't be shocked --- but the most expensive shavers are also the top-rated ones.

The only reason that I can't give it a full 5 stars is due to the minimal coverage/reviews of those folks that are on a tight budget.

Tyler's guide won me over. It allowed me to try another electric shaver, after learning to choose the right type for me.

By Manuk Puskul

This guide by Tyler is wholeheartedly recommended by me for anyone with sensitive irritable skin and/or ingrown hairs. I have tried an electric shaver twice and it wasn't good for me. The last one I tried was a pricey model however given my sensitive skin and probably my beard my skin was irritated. So years later after suffering ingrown hairs strictly on my lower & middle neck area, at the recommendation of my GP I looked into an electric shaver as an option once again. I did look into electric shavers and did find suggestions as to the best ones in relation to ingrown hairs specifically but wasn't convinced. Reading Tyler's guide gave me more confidence in making this confusing decision to invest in the purchase of an electric shaver once again. I realised I clearly chose the type of shaver causing irritation for sensitive skin, this greatly encouraged me that my next decision would be a much better informed one after this finalised my research. This guide provided me with a much better understanding of what type of beard I have by comparison with many photos and explanation as to which models are suitable. I only wish there was more guidance for the maintenance of the shaver for long term use. Living overseas it would be better to know how essential the cleaning unit is and is there lubrication in the proprietary cleaning fluid? Is running the head under hot water, or spraying the head with spray good? I watched a video about making the cleaning fluid yourself by buying some kind of sachets which from where I live is not practical. I would like to do it myself just as well if not better for the sake of both maintenance of the unit into the longer term as well as hygiene. Furthermore there are more products out there for prep ping for your shave to ensure reduction of irritation and treatment of ingrown hairs at least as your skin recovers. Because of those 2 areas I give it 4 stars, I am nevertheless happy with the guide. Thank you Tyler
