From Publishers Weekly

Aptly titled, this substantial anthology provides exposure to poets, emerging and established-Louis Simpson, Rita Dove, Luis Rodriguez-who write directly from the immigrant, ethnic and/or religious experience. The collection gives evidence of inequality and discrimination, and offers eyewitness accounts of the gross inconsistencies and bigotry of America. The poems tap into visceral energies, either born of or becoming a vitalizing anger; they bristle with a recognition of failed expectations. Thoughtful and attentive, the mother/daughter editorial team of the Gillans divides the book into sections concerned with "uprooting," "performing," "naming," "negotiating" and, finally and hopefully, "re-envisioning." The most moving poems concern a loss of home and custom, and the compromises struck in order to make life tolerable in a quietly (and not so quietly) intolerant society. Also distressing is work describing the intense desire of some poets to assimilate-efforts later remembered as humiliating. This collection is a must for anyone seeking an inclusive, unwincing catalogue of the American experience.

YA?Featuring well-and lesser-known American poets from a variety of cultural backgrounds, this volume presents fresh poems that tell the "American stories" of writers such as Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Gary Soto, Louise Erdrich, Ethelbert Miller, and Lucille Clifton. Selections are grouped by broad themes: "Uprooting," "Performing," "Naming," "Negotiating," and "Re-Envisioning." The editors deliberately selected works that "...did not create a pluralistic play of voices, or...make a simplistic call for diversity, but...that directly address the instability of American identity and confront the prevalence of cultural conflict and exchange within the United States." It is this focus and the conscious effort to avoid producing yet another supermarket survey of multicultural literature that make the book such a find. Brief biographical information is included.?Gretchen Portwood, W.T. Woodson High School, Fairfax, VA

"Land where my fathers died" begins a poem by Gregory Djanikian in this vibrant, much-needed collection in which the poets all struggle to retell their past, or, as Nellie Wong phrases it, to wonder, "Where is my country/where does it lie?" The last 15 years have seen a flowering of multicultural voices in American poetry, and readers will recognize many of the poets here, including Wong, Joy Harjo, Jimmy Santiago Baca, Lucille Clifton, and Mary Tallmountain. In five sections-uprooting, performing, naming, negotiating, and re-envisioning-the poets speak of their experiences in America: "a place/ where your skin/is your passport," as Yusef Komunyakaa observes. The poets here speak from the heart not only of the injustices they have suffered but also of their visions of a new land: "where all colors blend into one," says Judith Ortiz Cofer, "we will build our cities of light." Not all these poems are finely crafted, but all express voices too long silent. For all collections.

UNSETTLING AMERICA: AN ANTHOLOGY OF CONTEMPORARY MULTICULTURAL POETRY FROM PENGUIN BOOKS PDF

A multicultural array of poets explore what it is means to be American

This powerful and moving collection of poems stretches across the boundaries of skin color, language, ethnicity, and religion to give voice to the lives and experiences of ethnic Americans. With extraordinary honesty, dignity, and insight, these poems address common themes of assimilation, communication, and self-perception. In recording everyday life in our many American cultures, they displace the myths and stereotypes that pervade our culture.

Unsettling America includes work by:

Amiri Baraka
Chitra Banerjee Divakaruni
Rita Dove
Louise Erdich
Jessica Hagedorn
Joy Harjo
Garrett Hongo
Li-Young Lee
Pat Mora
Naomi Shihab Nye
Marye Percy
Ishmael Reed
Alberto Rios
Ntozake Shange
Gary Soto
Lawrence Ferlinghetti
Nellie Wong
David Hernandez

Five Stars

By Marina

Shows a side of American life that is not discussed very much; that somewhat represents the immigrant experience.
